

Important information about online exams

Insofar as fraud and cheating on tests and during examinations :

- are of such a nature as to deceive others as to my actual level of proficiency;
- are such that they mislead me about my actual level of mastery of the expected skills;
- constitute a violation of ethics;
- constitute a violation of the deontology in force in the academic world;
- are unfair to other students who are honestly taking the tests;

I am aware that I am required, in particular by virtue of the General Studies Regulations, to:

- take the tests and assignments in person;
- take the tests and assignments without the help of anyone other than those explicitly authorised by the teacher (in the case of group work, for example);
- take the tests and assignments without the use of other materials than those explicitly authorised by the teacher;
- not disclose, reproduce, or disseminate, in any form and through any channel whatsoever, the examination questions and their answers, except with the teacher's explicit permission;
- only make personal use of my examination copy, after the “exams copies consultation”, and not disclose, share or disseminate it without the prior written consent of the University authorities;
- not violate the image rights of others and not make video or audio recordings without the express permission of the persons involved;
- not resort to plagiarism and to quote my sources according to the usual rules of citation;
- not take part in dishonest activities aimed at improving my performance;
- fully abide by the General Studies Regulations, as well as ULB Network and Website Users' Charter.

I take note of the fact that, under Article 72 of the General Studies Regulations, any fraud in the evaluation will lead, on an academic level, to a sanction which may go as far as the awarding of a mark of 0/20 for the examination in question.

I also take note of the fact that, without prejudice to the academic penalty already applied, the perpetrator of evaluation fraud is liable to incur, by application of the Disciplinary Regulations relating to students, and more specifically Articles 2, 4, 5, 7, third paragraph and 22, the disciplinary penalties referred to therein, which may go as far as permanent exclusion from the University.
